FFA Chapter Has Received Many Awards

Henry B. Pack, award winning vocational agriculture teacher at Appomattox High School who has led his students to state and national recognition, was named winner last Thursday of a Valley Forge Classroom Teachers Medal.

Pack was one of 332 American classroom teachers to be selected for the national recognition from Freedom Foundation at Valley Forge. And he was one of four Virginia teachers named.

Nominations of teachers for the awards are made by the general public. Pack said Thursday he had no idea who nominated him.

He said, "I consider it quite an honor, and I feel very humble."

Pack has been a vocational agriculture teacher at Appomattox High School for 17 years.

He has had three of his students selected as American Farmers, three as Star State Farmers, two to win Future Farmers of America Foundation awards, four to hold state FFA offices and many to be named State Farmers.

The FFA chapter at the high school has received the Gold Emblem at the National FFA Convention twice and is to receive it again this fall.

In 1957 Pack was one of 25 persons to receive the Gold Key of the Honorary American Farmer Degree, FFA's top award, at the national FFA Convention.

His recent award from the Freedom Foundation at Valley Forge was based on "exceptional service in furthering the cause of responsible citizenship, patriotism and a greater understanding and appreciation of the American Way of Life."

PACK SAID that in vocational agriculture classes, "We try to teach rural leadership to those boys — teach them to appreciate our country and its advantages. We've had some outstanding rural leaders."

"The Valley Forge Classroom Teachers Medals are presented in the home communities of the recipients at a public school or community function.

Other Virginia winners are Elizabeth Cox of Independence, Jane K. Elliott of Arlington and Mrs. Betty Rubright of Falls Church.

Rebels Rack Generals 39-6

BROOKNEAL: The Appomattox Rebels toppled the William Campbell Generals 39-6 in a one sided football feature. Jimmy Torrence and G. H. Jamerson teamed with Dickie Williams to lead the Rebs to their third consecutive victory. The Appomattox team fought eighty yards for their first taste of pay dirt. After that it was no stopping them as they rumbled their highest score of the season.

Halfback G. H. Jamerson picked up the first touchdown for the Rebels on a five yard run. Later he took a 45 yard pass second score to put Appomattox ahead 12-0. But then William Campbell attempted to close the gap with Jack Carr going the distance or a touchdown. Later on in the second quarter, back, Edwin Stanley raced nine yards or the third Rebel TD. Once again, Quarterback Torrence teamed up on a 35 yard pass to Jamerson who scored another six-pointer. Torrence carried the pig skin' or the extra point. Still in the second quarter, Dickie Williams snatched a General pass and sprinted 90 yards for a Rebel touchdown. Torrence again carried for the extra point. The score at the half was 32-0 in favor of Appomattox.

The A.H.S. Band was on hand for halftime entertainment.

Early in the third stanza Torrence plunged over the goal line for the Rebels' final tally. Jimmy Burge followed with the point after.

At this time most of the Appomattox first string was replaced by reserves who finished out the game in royal order. These younger Rebels held William Campbell scoreless or two quarters.

In one instance the Generals gained to the Appomattox two yard line, but the second team put up a coal line stand and held them for four downs. These reserves proved that they are good football material.

The Rebels played well and were forced to punt only once.

This Friday the Rebels will be at home to play Nelson High School. Nelson defeated Fuvanna 32-0

Skip-Row Plan Urged To Aid Leaf Growers

Abbitt Says Dark Fired In Good Demand

More help for Virginia farmers is promised on two fronts— improvements in dark fired tobacco culture and in drought relief.

The tobacco program, described by Rep. Watkins M. Abbitt D-Va., calls for a new skip-row method in the growing of dark fired Type 21 Tobacco. It will become effective next year.

This change on allotted tobacco acreage, Abbitt said, has been agreed to by the Department of Agriculture. Abbitt presented the growers' case for easier culture and more economic operation.

For Virginia farmers plagued by the worst drought since 1930, Abbitt is seeking lower hay freight rates and is offering bills to permit government sales of grain at reduced rates to hog and poultry growers.

"This would put hogs and poultry in the same category as cattle," Abbitt said.

The bills would provide for sale to hog and poultry growers, in disaster — designated areas, grain at 75 per cen of the support price. The present law and his bill, Abbitt said, are designed to help farmers maintain foundation stock.

The skip-row method of culture of Type 21, grown only in Virginia, calls for a pattern of two rows, then a skipped space, then two more rows.

This will permit easier operation in spraying, culture and harvesting of the crop by leaving space for use of tractors, wagons and sleds between rows, Abbitt explained.

The new pattern of planting, Abbitt said, would stretch over a larger area but would mean no more plants and thus no increase in acreage allotments.

It will doubtless increase production slightly, Abbitt added, because of the better culture.

"But Virginia dark fired is having a tremendous good demand in foreign trade," he added. "I believe this is due to the willingness of the Virginia growers to emphasize quality demanded by the trade.

"The skip-row method will tend to improve quality further, as well as province for more economical operations."

Dark fired tobacco, which is used to a large extent as wrapper for cigars, is grown principally in the counties of Appomattox, Buckingham, Cumberland, Nottoway, Charlotte and Dinwiddie.

Several years ago Abbitt succeeded in having Virginia Type 21 separated from Type 22, grown principally in Tennessee, and from Type 23, grown principally in Kentucky, for purposes of allotments and price supports.

But for that change in law, he said, the skip-row method would not have been approved since generally growers of the other types have shown no interest in such a change.

Abbitt said his bills to aid hog and poultry growers have been referred to the House Agriculture Committee and probably will be considered soon by a sub committee.

He said he has asked Chairman Harold D. Cooley, D-N. C., of the Agriculture Committee to request a prompt report on the proposals from the Secretary of Agriculture.

Concerning reduced freight rates on hay, Abbitt said the Virginia delegation is backin a move to have further cuts agreed to by railroads.

So far, he said, railroads west of the Mississippi have not agreed to such cuts, although there is general agreements among eastern railroads.

It is estimated, he added, that there is enough hay available for sale east of the Mississippi to supply Virginia farmers until the end of the year.

"But we will need hay from the west for the first three or four months of next year, he said.

Cuts in freight rates vary from 10 to 25 per cent, or less.

At Bureau Meeting

Five Agencies Local Farmers Offer Money To

Five different lending agencies offered money to drought stricken farmers of the county at the Farm Bureau meeting Tuesday evening. Bureau president Walter Henry first presented county agent Jim Smith who praised the twenty farmers of the county who for the first time have put up silage this year. Stating that he believes agriculture is to be on the 'brink of tremendous growth," Smith said he hopes local farmers have not reached the decision to dispose of their entire herds, and that even though 'most people face 'rough sledding' because of the dry weathers," he feels there are enough agencies concerned about Appomattox farmers to work out a solution to what everyone hopes is a 'short' term problem."

B. C. Harver, of the Bank of Appomattox, said, "It hurts us to see large number of cattle go to market." He offered the bank's services to any farmer needing advice on how to protect his livestock investment through the winter.

Hinter Evans, three - county representative for Farmers Home Administration, explained FHA emergency loans to supplement existing loan agencies. Some of these carry a three per cent interest rate, he said. Evans suggested recreation areas, sale of hunting privileges, "farm vacations", and homes for retired persons, as means of additional farm income.

Edward Shorter, representing the Pamplin Branch, First National Bank of Farmville, said, "We're willing to work with farmers who need funds, either at the Pamplin branch or in Farmville."

DeWitt Evans, speaking for Farmers National Bank, said, "Most of us are able to get credit even beyond our ability to pay." He added that silage and irrigation have proved of great value to area farmers.

Bureau president Henry read a letter from J. A. Overstreet, of the Farmville Production Credit Association. Overstreet, unable to be present, wrote that "all requests for assistance will receive the most careful consideration,' and announced a voluntary reduction in interest rates by Federal Land Banks, from 6 to 5½ percent on all outstanding loans.
